A work of narrative non-fiction dealing with common questions and doubts people have about vaccines

If you have ever thought any of the following, "Vaccines are not for me, I'm young and healthy and don't need them"; "I rather develop natural immunity to infections, without vaccination"; "Immunisation is a personal choice, it only affects me, so I'll take the risk" then this book is for you. You would also enjoy this book if you have ever heard people articulate these beliefs and you couldn't quite put your finger on why these are common misunderstandings.

This book is a collection of honest conversations and discussions the author had over the years with people who have doubts and hesitations about the contents, purpose, and safety of vaccines.

About the Author

Alex Ramirez is a vaccinology and immunology expert, trained in biochemistry and medical research at Imperial College London. He has worked in academia, big-pharma and the biotech industry studying existing vaccines and new ones.
