Explores how partnerships between big businesses and civil society organizations are corporatizing civil society in India.

This book explores how the partnerships between big businesses and civil society organizations are influencing the development and rights landscape in India. Can these collaborations lead to win-win solutions for marginalized groups or will they destroy civil society's resistance to market forces?

Readership

Development practitioners, policy makers, corporate social responsibility executives, CSO workers, scholars and students of business ethics, social activism, and Indian politics.

Key selling points

- Sheds light on emerging trend
- Combines historical research with contemporary interviews
- Wide-ranging scholarship.
