Examines the divergent economic growth between Nigeria and Asia, particularly focusing on factors such as state and institutional capabilities that have led to Asia's advancement in industrial and technological knowledge compared with Africa, utilizing both qualitative and quantitative methods to analyze these differences in economic progress.

This book examines Nigeria, Africa's largest economy and most populous country, and five selected Asian countries in comparative development and sectoral perspectives. It employs quantitative and qualitative methods, including case studies and statistical/econometric methods, to analyze factors that separate the sample countries that made rapid economic progress in "catching up" and those that tend to be stagnating and "falling behind."

Readership

The book is aimed to be used first for a general audience. Second, it will be useful for university professors and students, policy makers, development economists, political economists, and historians interested in development.

About the Author(s) / Editor(s)

Professor Banji Oyelaran-Oyeyinka is a renowned global thought leader and the first Nigerian professor in the field of development economics and industrial policy.
