Explores the dominance of melodramatic songs in Hindi cinema between 1951 and 1963 and analyses their emotional power, narrative function and connection to cinematic genres, while highlighting their role in creating cathartic experiences for audiences

The way in which the spectator responds to the song and how narrative, lyrics, music, mise-en-scènes, all come together to accentuate sentimentality and melodrama in the Golden Age of Bollywood cinema (1951–1963) is the book's key thematic concern.

Readership

Undergraduate students on Asian cinemas generally, students studying Indic civilisation and language, especially Hindi and Urdu, and general readers interested in Bollywood cinema. An academic work that functions also as a coffee table book as it carries over 100 images and lengthy translations of important songs of the Golden Age of Bollywood Cinema.

Key selling points

Presents the first major book about the centrality of songs in Bollywood cinema and about the Golden Age of Bollywood cinema

Combines theory with practical evidence

Combines sentiment analysis with Indian theories of spectator response
